NATURAL SCIENCE

EVOLUTION

PREMISE

Natural selection has no foresight. It does not select organisms because they are "better" in an absolute sense, but because particular inherited traits affect reproductive success in particular environments.

QUESTION

If evolution has no goal, why do humans find it so difficult to stop describing it as progress?