NATURAL SCIENCE

LIMITS

PREMISE

There are questions science may be unable to answer because of fundamental limits: some events cannot be observed directly, some phenomena can only be inferred, and some questions may not be empirically testable.

QUESTION

Should science be judged by the questions it can answer—or also by recognizing which questions it cannot?